A new study published in the journal of the American Heart Association found that for African-American women, it only takes two metabolic abnormalities to raise the risk of heart disease.

There possibly is a discrepancy between this experiment and real clinical practice.